An edited transcript of part of W. E. Gladstone’s speech introducing the first Home Rule Bill to the House of Commons, 8 April 1886

The two questions of land and the Irish government are closely connected [because] they are the two channels through which we hope to [get] social order in Ireland.

I come to the basis of the whole [problem]: law is discredited in Ireland [because] it comes to the people in a foreign garb. The case of Ireland is not the same as that of England and Scotland. England, by her own strength, makes her own laws just as independently as if she were not combined with two other countries. Scotland has been allowed [by] this house to make her own laws.

The consequence is that the law in England is felt by the people to be English; the law in Scotland is felt by the people to be Scotch; but the law in Ireland is not felt by the people to be Irish.

[It is] little less than a mockery to be told that [this situation contributes] to the unity of this great, noble, and world-wide empire. Something must be done to restore to Ireland the confidence of the people in the law.
